WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 12, 2025

Flooding Activity Washington

- Western Washington is facing a "historic" flooding crisis that has forced tens of thousands to flee their homes and could displace thousands more on Friday as rivers reach record levels.
- More than a foot of rain fell across parts of Washington State in the last 72 hours, the NWS said.
- There have been no reports of fatalities, but local authorities and first responders stressed the potentially lethal nature of the record-breaking flooding. Warnings remain in place for some parts of the state until Saturday morning.
- Washington Gov. Bob Ferguson said the Skagit was expected to crest Friday morning, making the period through Friday night critical for residents and first responders.
- The National Weather Service said the Skagit River reached 37.7 feet overnight and will cause severe or record flooding in the critical agricultural region from the town of Sedro-Woolley to Mount Vernon. The threshold for a flood event is 28 feet.
- About 100,000 people living in the 100-year Skagit River flood plain were told to "leave now" in a county order Thursday.
- Near the Canadian border, the cities of Sumas, Nooksack, and Everson were also evacuated. Sumas Mayor Bruce Bosch said much of the area had been "devastated," with damage similar to that suffered in flooding four years ago. The full extent of the damage will only become clear when the water recedes, he said.
- FEMA response teams have been deployed to the state following more than a foot of rain in some areas.
- Helicopters rescued two families on Thursday from the roofs of homes in Sumas that had been flooded by about 15 feet of water.
- In nearby Welcome, erosion from the floodwaters caused at least two houses to collapse into the Nooksack River.
- More than 7,000 customers in Washington remained without electricity by Friday morning, according to PowerOutage.us.
- A break from the heavy rain has begun, but another firehose of rain will douse the region next week.
- "There is an indication that a new atmospheric river will develop and extend all the way from near Hawaii to the coastal areas of the Northwest on Monday," AccuWeather Senior Meteorologist Brett Anderson said. "This setup is sometimes referred to as the Pineapple Express."
